CVMA Reminds Pet Owners that August is National Pet Immunization Awareness Month Chicago Veterinary Medical Association emphasizes maintaining pet health

For many pet owners, their pets aren't just like family, they are family, which is a great reason to give them immunizations that can help them enjoy a long and happy life. Immunizations play a critical role in maintaining the health and well-being of animals and preventing the spread of diseases.

National Pet Immunization Awareness Month is observed in August to highlight the importance of vaccinations for pets. Chicago Veterinary Medical Association wants to remind pet owners of the integral nature of immunizations and pet health.

Deadly viruses can originate from various places, including your own yard by way of insects or other animals, and even inside your own home. While you can't control everything that your pet may encounter, immunizations can help minimize the risks substantially.

When a puppy receives the distemper vaccine, it's helping keep them safe from a virus that is incurable and fatal. The leptospirosis vaccine is an important preventive measure for dogs, especially in areas where the disease is prevalent. Leptospirosis can cause kidney and liver disease in both dogs and humans and can prove fatal. Rabies – regardless of feline or canine status – is always fatal and can be easily addressed with the administering of a rabies vaccine. Of course, some immunizations need to be given regularly – typically annually – to ensure continued protection for your pet.

Beyond vaccinations, monthly preventative medications like those that keep fleas, ticks, and heartworm at bay, also are essential for pet health. Now is a good time to renew your pet's prescription.

“It’s important to recognize that making sure your pet’s immunizations are up to date, is worth the time and effort,” explained Dr. Marina Jaworsky, CVMA Board President. “By participating in National Pet Immunization Awareness Month, pet owners can help ensure that their furry friends receive the necessary vaccinations to stay healthy and safe.”

If you have questions about the immunizations your pet is scheduled to receive, be sure to ask your veterinary provider. They can provide a detailed explanation to help you understand the purpose and importance of each vaccination.
